The student will be based in the Institute of General Food Chemistry research centre and will become part of a project team working on the following projects:

- designing an electrochemical method system for determining tryptophan solution,
- molecular modelling methods to study the drug-protein and DNA interactions,
- the application of fluorescence spectroscopy for folding-unfolding transition in proteins.

The trainee will take part in practical laboratory works assisting the university researchers. The student will take a challenge to find literature data in these areas and to find out about analytical methods. The student will acquire knowledge in methods of measurements and the sample's preparation.
